When confronted with the situation that the appellant was not transferred, how she was aggrieved of the transfer order of somebody else, the learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the appellant had already moved an application for her transfer to the post where private respondent was transferred. The situation is totally incomprehensible as to how the transfer order of somebody else could be assailed by the appellant before this Tribunal as the appellant is having no locus-standi to challenge the transfer order of somebody else. The learned counsel for the appellant could not explain the situation. This being so this appeal is groundless and is dismissed in limine. Consign.
