2. The gist of the arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioners was that when not only the petitioners after observing all codal formalities were appointed and regularized but at the time of their initial recruitments, manual verification of their registrations was properly confirmed, notwithstanding, online verification is not the responsibility of the petitioners rather it was the PM&DC to do the same, therefore, the impugned letter with regard to deposit the drawn salaries on the basis of non-verification of online verification of their PM&DC registrations is nothing but a sheer example of misuse of authority by respondent No.1, so vested in him, that too, when their appointment orders were issued by respondent No.2 and even otherwise, respondent No.1 is nothing to do so.

3. The main thrust of the arguments of the learned Additional Advocate General appearing on behalf of the respondents was that when the petitioners, on account of non-verification of their PM&DC registrations online, were contacted time and again but not only they switched off their respective mobile numbers but also absented themselves from their duties and when the respondents, at their own, approached the PM&DC with regard to verification of PM&DC registration of the petitioners, they were learnt that the petitioners are not registered as medical practitioners in PM&DC and their names do not exist in its database,

The Livestock Research and Development Department is also striving for the betterment of Livestock Sector of the Province. However, in the current scenario, lack of need-based research and effective coordination among relevant stakeholder is the key limiting factor in critical issue identification and solving. Though the Universities and the department are playing their role, it is not at the level it is supposed to be.

In this regard the following issues are related to Veterinary Education and Research:

- The existing infrastructure of the faculties and laboratories are not sufficient according to the requirements of the degree/certificate programs, thus the graduates are facing difficulties in the field conditions.
- The existing infrastructure of the research establishment is below the required international standards.

Earlier, the Livestock and Dairy Development Department was mandated to provide extension services through its Animal Health work force. Of late, a separate Directorate of Livestock Production Extension and Communication has been established to look after the field extension services. The Directorate of Livestock Production Extension and Communication is also working on human resource management and its development. Due to increased productivity and efficiency of livestock, importance of knowledge in human resource management cannot be underestimated.

Livestock Extension Services and Human Resource Development is constrained by the following issues:

- Inadequate extension services to address the needs of farming communities
- Lack of the use of conventional and modern tools of communication
- Lack of resources to strengthen Farmer Field Schools approach, Livestock Extension through women workers, and need-based trainings
